OPEN EDUCATION & PEDAGOGY RESOURCES

Open educational resources (OER) are freely accessible, openly licensed resources that can be used for teaching, learning, assessment and research purposes. OER are publicly accessible for you to use, re-mix, improve and redistribute.

Here are some links to hubs for art and visual history specific OER. While mostly United States and Europe focused, they can provide a springboard for content creation and learning.

“Open Education & Pedagogy Resources.” Open Art Histories, accessed February 28, 2022.

Three Methods of Using AER/OER:

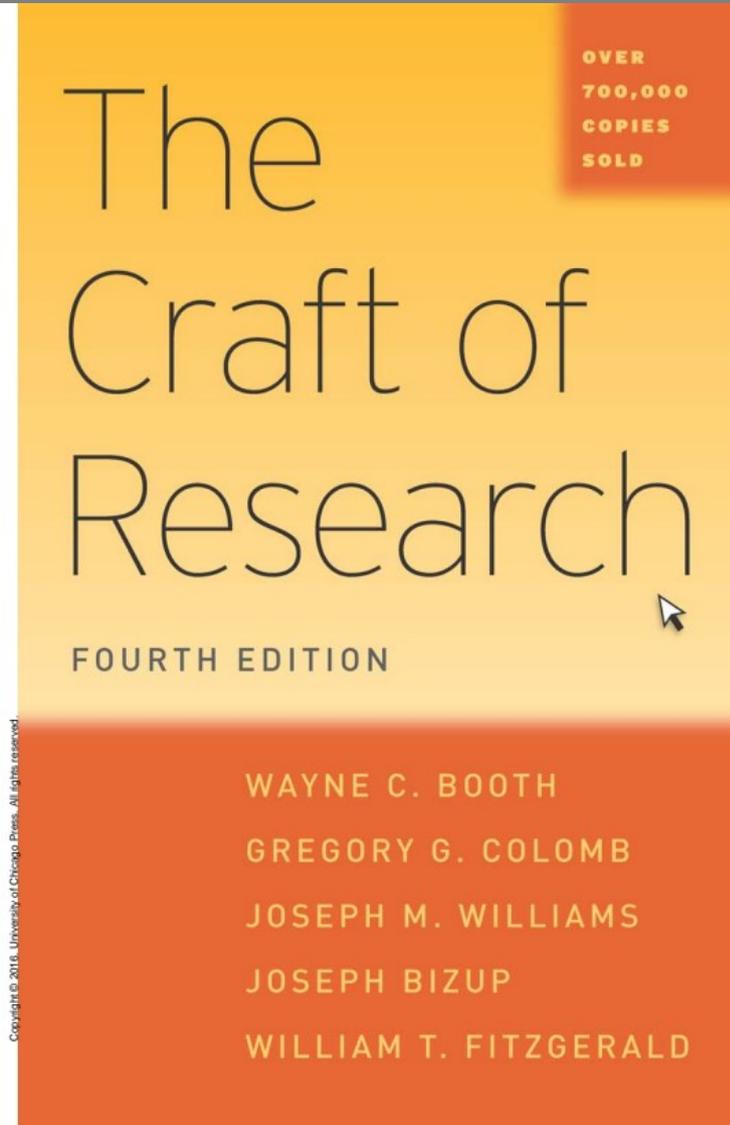

- 1) Assigned Course Readings – Traditional Disciplinary Skills
 - Affordable Educational Resources - Archer Library/Leganto system
 - Open Educational Resources – Web-based scholarly sources

- 2) “Asynchronous” Course Content – Fun and Educational Content to Teach Critical Skills and Present Alternative Voices (and giving students a break from listening to me!)
 - Videos (see the art object in situ)
 - Web essays and articles (exhibition reviews etc.)
 - Grey literature (archival and institutional documents)

- 3) Images in Lectures – Discipline Specific Practice in the Web 2.0 World
 - Sourcing accurate and ethical images for my presentations
 - Modelling proper academic practices for students

1) Assigned Course Readings

- ✓ Saving students money $$$
- ✓ The problem of the holistic textbook
- ✓ Privileging multiple-voices
- ✓ Creating a course your way
- ✓ Don't let the textbook dictate!

AN IN-PUBLIC INVESTIGATION INTO 11 AFRICAN WORKS OF ART FROM UMMA'S COLLECTION.

This exhibition proactively engages with debates about restitution and the ethics of museums' owning African heirlooms collected during the era of colonization. The investigation and research into 11 works of African art will be conducted publicly — visitors will have access to documents, photographs, and correspondence that will help UMMA develop a better understanding of each object's history, grappling in real time with questions surrounding legal and ethical ownership of these artworks. Though complex, this project presents exciting opportunities for museum transparency and creating new pathways for relationship-building with partners in Africa and its diaspora. Museum visitors can begin to explore this investigation online and in-person in Fall 2021.

REPATRIATION:
the act or process of restoring or returning human remains or cultural artifacts to their country of origin.

REPARATION:
the act or process of making amends for past wrongs.

RETURN:
to bring to, send to, or put something back in its former or proper place.

RESTITUTION

Museums preserve our cultural heritage, but some objects in our collections present an ethical dilemma. While many objects were obtained through purchase with the
